Kohala Coast

Mo'okini Heiau is the state's first national landmark, built in the 15th century.

Kamehameha Akahi Aina Heiau is the birthplace of Kamehameha the Great.

Along this coast are towering sea cliffs and precipitous valleys chiseled by wind and pounding surf.

Waipi'o Valley was a favorite spot of Hawaiian Royalty.

Hāwi

Kapa'au

Māhukona

Kamehameha the Great statue was originally cast in bronze as cast, then recovered. Kamehameha the 1st's statue was completed in 1880.

The Kohala District is primarily the area on the northern tip of the island and includes the luxury resorts along the coast.

One of the 2 major ports on the island, Kawaihae Harbor is where the 1st horses and cattle landed.

A herd of wild donkeys known as "Kona Nightingales" can be heard "singing" in this area.

The Kona Districts covers the west coast and is divided into North and South Kona. North Kona includes vast barren lava flows near the airport, a variety of resorts along Alii Drive, foothills of Mount Hualalai and Mauna Loa, and the town of Kailua-Kona. South Kona begins as the town of Captain Cook and is generally rolling countryside with an arid climate along the coast and tropical climate in the inland area. Macadamia nuts and coffee are among the major crops grown here.

Mauna Loa is the largest active mountain on earth in the world.
